

THE GOLDEN HOUSE OF NERO

Some Aspects of Roman Architecture

by AXEL BOËTHIUS

“In this long-awaited volume the distinguished Swedish archaeologist Axel Boëthius surveys the history of Roman town planning and architecture from the primitive huts of the eighth century B.C. to the brick-faced tenements of the empire.”

—Wilhelmina F. Jashemski, The American Scholar

“He explores the architecture of single and multi-family houses from Bronze Age huts in the Sabine village on the Quirinal, through tenement houses and Nero’s ‘Petit Trianon’ of Imperial Rome to medieval houses and palaces of Florence and Rome . . . a worthwhile and fascinating effort. . . . It is worth getting lost in THE GOLDEN HOUSE OF NERO . . . there are lofty thoughts to wander in and shafts of light illuminating obscure passages. The total experience is memorable and impressive.”

—Carl Feiss, Journal of the American Institute of Architects

The Cathedral of Granada

BY EARL E. ROSENTHAL

The cathedral of Granada, a major monument not only of Spain's Golden Age but of the European Renaissance, poses many formal and historical questions that have never been satisfactorily answered. This book is the first full-scale attempt to search out the origins of a structure that has been regarded mistakenly, the author believes, as 'a creature in search of its species, a handsome hybrid born of some strange and now forgotten union'. Although this is primarily architectural history, the analysis of the complex circumstances that inspired the program and practices of the church adds to the study a dimension of particular relevance to those interested in the study of Spanish social and ecclesiastical history and the development of church liturgy.

The Gothic

Literary Sources and Interpretations Through Eight Centuries

BY PAUL FRANKL

In its flowering in the middle ages, its decline in the Renaissance, its revival and re-evaluation from the 17th century to our own time, the curious and contagious architectural style known as the Gothic has been a focus of controversy and speculation for many of the most brilliant minds of the past 600 years. What has been thought and written about Gothic architecture, by men as widely separated in time and point of view as Abbot Suger and Henry Adams, is assembled in this book in a critical discussion with a generous selection and translation of quotations from the original texts.

The Villa d'Este at Tivoli

BY DAVID R. COFFIN

Winner of the Alice Davis Hitchcock Book Award, 1960, presented by the Society of Architectural Historians

Through the careful examination of all the known records, the author has been able to reconstruct the history of the architecture, the fountains and sculpture of the gardens, and the interior fresco decorations, both as projected and as actually completed, of the Villa d'Este at Tivoli. From the Cardinal of Ferrara's first purchase of land in 1550 to the aerial bombardment in World War II, this history follows the evolution, decline, and later revaluation of one of the most ambitious and spectacular achievements in a villa-garden complex.
